

Rob McLeod

Fiddle, Whistle, Cello

Robert McLeod started playing classical violin at the age of 7 at Walt Disney Magnet School in Chicago. Learning fiddle music was part of the repertoire during his classical lessons, and he became more and more interested in learning Irish Music. In 2008, he started taking lessons under Sean Cleland at the Irish Music School of Chicago. Since then, he has been attending many sessions throughout the city as well as performing for the Irish Music School. Robert is currently attending North Park University and studying Music Education and has been trained to teach Brass, Percussion, and Stringed instruments including violin and cello. He is also involved in many classical ensembles at North Park University as well as playing violin in his church worship team. "I hope to use my diverse playing to help inspire young musicians across the city in many areas of music."
